- Data Rescue Project (2026/04/27 12:50)
  The Data Rescue Project started in February 2025 as a coordinated effort of three data organizations, including members of IASSIST, RDAP, and the Data Curation Network. The Data Rescue Project is a grassroots volunteer community dedicated to access to public data for the public good. We enable rapid response efforts for at-risk public data grounded in recognized data stewardship principles. We partner with allied communities of data creators, carers, and their organizations to advocate for sustainable data access.
- Transit Live Mapping Solutions (2026/04/05 08:55)
  Hi, we are Transit Live Mapping Solutions, Enhancing openness and promoting access to Dresden public infrastructure data since 2022. a small group of students, currently consisting of Marenz, Tassilo and 0xA, that ended up getting seriously nerdsniped by something that started off as a small side-project during lockdown. Our aim is to collect reliable real time information about public transport and make it available to everyone in a straightforward way. We are convinced that open data for commonly shared infrastructure will help contribute to a more efficient and safe state of operation. Check out the map to see what we've built so far.
- labournet.tv (2026/04/02 11:44)
  We produce strike videos and feature films and are building an online archive of films from the workers' movement. The focus is on the situation of workers, their self-organisation, strikes and class struggles, and the question of how we build power from below.
