- Why “Correction of Error” Gets Incidents \(and Product Failures\) Wrong (2026/01/26 02:20)
Lorin Hochstein argues that AWS's "Correction of Error" framing is dangerously misleading—defects alone don't explain incidents. The same applies to product work: "fixing the bug" often misses the systemic context that made the failure surface in the first place.
- Why AI in Interviews Is Bad for Candidates, Not Just Companies (2026/01/26 02:03)
A LinkedIn post about AI in interviews generated some pushback. Here's the fuller version of what I was trying to say.
- The invisible 40% of engineering work (2026/01/23 15:21)
Anton Zaides on shadow work in engineering—the invisible work that eats capacity and can burn out your engineers.
- The B2B Product Leadership Delusion (2026/01/16 15:39)
B2B product leaders rate themselves highly across core responsibilities, but their IC PMs disagree on every measure. The gap points to a mutual visibility problem, not just a performance one.
- The invention of “classic rock” (2026/01/16 15:37)
Daniel Parris traces how "classic rock" was invented by radio executives chasing advertising demographics, not by music fans debating what deserved the label.
- How to Set Up OpenCode as Your Product Second Brain (2026/01/08 18:20)
A practical 30-minute guide to setting up OpenCode as a product management second brain with custom slash commands for PRD reviews, OKR checks, and idea stress-testing.
- Learning in the Age of AI (2026/01/07 18:33)
Scott H. Young examines what skills remain worth developing as AI reshapes work, finding that generalists and experienced workers may fare better than specialists and newcomers.
- Don't Outsource Your Love of Music to AI (2026/01/02 22:59)
Liz Pelly argues that Spotify Wrapped isn't just convenience—it's another example of automating away something personal. When we let algorithms tell us what mattered, we lose our own sense of why it connected.
